That idea embraces the formation of a metropolitan league to consist of basketball aggregations in and about New York City.

Ed Wilde, manager of the Brooklyn Bodgers, offers an assertion that the of the Brooklyn Basketball Club and Bill Colgan, manager of Knights of St. Anthony team, are heartly in favor of the proposition.

There are several convincing arguments which tend to approve of the construction of a metropolitan league. Primarily, in a league composed of teams in this city or in its immediate vicinity, the cost of transportation from one court to another would be sufficiently small to be al-

Fordham Did Well Against "Big Three" This Year.

If the Fordham athletic teams fare as well against the "Big Three" in 1922 as they have done this year, the Maroon followers will be more than scatisfied. In athletic encounters with Yale, Harvard and Princeton, Fordham scored four victories out of five games: three at baseball, one at basketball and one hockey match.

Harvard was the only one of the "Big Three" that was successful in beating the Maroon. The Crimson won at baseball, but it took eleven hard-fought innings to turn the trick.
